

In Episode 2, "A Constitution for All," in the PBS series, A More or Less Perfect Union, Dr. Ibrahima Seck, director of research at the Whitney Plantation, describes the daily life of slaves on the plantation. The bell served as the clock, calling slaves to work before the sun came up, working until sundown, or as the slaves referred to it, working from "can't see to can't see."